Complementary Energy Therapy

Renal Department

Soothing, relaxing, effective.
No need to say or do anything;
just sit back, and enjoy.

Introduction

Complementary energy therapy is a gentle and non-invasive therapy, which is effective in promoting relaxation, reducing stress and restoring physical and emotional balance, thus improving general wellbeing. Energy therapy sessions are already available in other areas of medicine at the Lister Hospital, and we are now offering this calming and soothing therapy to all our patients within the Renal Department.

These sessions are available in the Renal Department irrespective of whether you are on dialysis or not, and are provided in addition to the regular medical treatment you already receive within the NHS service.

Principles of complementary energy therapy

Everything is made up of energy, and every living thing has an energy field. Energy therapists are trained and qualified to channel positive energy to the recipient in order to help the person's system balance itself, increase the person's ability to cope and provide a sense of relaxation and wellbeing.

Energy therapy is not hypnosis, nor it is related to any religious principle. You remain fully clothed and fully conscious throughout the session.

What happens during a complementary energy session?

- Each session lasts between 20 to 30 minutes.
- After gaining your consent to treatment, the therapist will make you as comfortable as possible either in a chair or a bed, whichever is available. There is no need to undress.
- You do not need to say or do anything during the session itself, just sit back and relax.

- You do not need to provide any background details or describe your problems or symptoms to the therapist, unless you wish to.
- The therapist holds their hands lightly on or just above your body and focuses on channelling positive energy to effect positive results.
- Most people who receive energy therapy usually feel pleasantly warm, calm and relaxed after the session.

Situations when you might find energy therapy useful:

- Invasive procedures - Some people can feel stressed about having to stay awake while an invasive procedure is underway, even though they know that their clinician will monitor what pain relief is needed throughout the process. Energy therapy will not alter your planned procedure, but it is an additional therapy offered at the start of the process, which can promote a feeling of calm and relaxation.
- About to go on dialysis - If sitting in the waiting room for dialysis fills you with worry, then you may welcome this calming, relaxing therapy to soothe your tension.
- Clinic appointments - If you are feeling tense or can't concentrate before or after your renal clinic appointment (whatever the reason), and you don't want to talk about these feelings to staff, this gentle relaxing therapy may quickly restore your sense of calm and ease.
- Inpatient on Ward 6B - If you are an inpatient on the renal ward and are feeling worried, anxious, frightened or tense (for any reason), a 20 minute energy therapy session may help to restore peace of mind.
